____ The Foreign Inspectorate. From the Supreme Court & Consular Gazette.) In a recent unmber we noticed the chief points connected with the establishment of the system of a Foreign Inspectorte of Customs in China. and we made allusion to the satisfactory mannor in which the difficulties that at first beset the scheme were overcome, and how in the course of ten years, the Customs' service has assumed a recognized status and has been placed under efficient and careful organisation. Connected with the history of the establish. ment of the Foreign Inspectorate in China, is a subject which, pending the approaching revision of the Treaty of Tientsin, is likely to assome no little importance. We allude to the induction which the foreign Custom House Officials will doubtless have with our diplomatic authorities. Concomitant with the rise of the At present, the Hai-Kuan Bank, where duties | Foreign Inspectorate of Customs, has been that fion. "Anglo-Chinese," "Americo-Chinese" or country. The coal mines, according to the ob. The result is an expenditure of trouble and "Franco-Chinese," would perhaps describe them. servations of many travellers, are worked so time, which could be avoided by the adoption if they consisted exclusively of Englishmen. Americans, or Frenchmen; but they are composed of subjects of all nationalities; and in order to classify them, we may perhaps be permitted to use the somewhat barbarous expression of "Europea-Chinese" Officials. As the service ander the Chinese Government has been extended in magazinde and importance, there have surung up a number of men, whose position and interests more or less attach them to the Imperial Authorities. Employed by the Chinese: in constant and intimate intercourse with the. officials; dependent upon their favour for pecuniary emulument, for reputation and position, they are naturally disposed to lean towards their views and further their designs. In caying this, we have no desire to reflect apon a well informed and very useful class of officials, whose services are of great value to foreign trade! We wish only to raise a warnintion, which is often bestowed upon them. They are regarded by many, especially by persons at in fact, as being almost the only men who are thoroughly acquainted with the bearing of mich tsin. Treaty and upon subsequent occasions, is sufficient to show the degree of importance which is attached to the views of foreigners in the Chinese service; and it may, therefore, be not undesirable to consider how far this infinlence is warranted, and in what respects it is likely to be pernicious. An acquaintance with the language, combined with the opportunities of intercourse with the native officials, must be productive of a knowedge of Chinese matters superior to that which can be gleaned by the outside world whose conclusions are necessarily based onon somewhat shender premises. But it must not, therefore, be considered that the views of those vio have this species of acquaintance, with the matives, are: nesecondly correct. Such persons become pushissed of a variety of particulars, but or many of them, it must never be forgotten. hey depend as much upon hearsay as do others who have not been initiated into the mysteries of the language. A statement is none the more reliable because it happens to be unde to man in Chinese; and very many of the pariculars with respect to foreign trade, which mve appeared from time to time in the Reports

Further, it is important to hear in mind that, ogether with information of this nature, the foreign Customs' Officials are very liable to be also supplied with ready made views; and the side of the question which the Chinese desire to only in reference to the benefit that may account
